

John Hatheway's Photo Ark Videos

Here are a handful of videos that I had a hand in making. One of these, the video of the baby silvery Javan gibbon, was made by my coworker, but I made the video clips that she used. It's a great video to include though because people respond the most to baby animals, especially mammals. If these videos aren't what you're looking for, you can go to Joelsartore.com and search the gallery by typing a kind of animal (mammal, bird, reptile, or amphibian) to narrow it down. Videos get sifted to the top of search results and I made pretty much everything that will pop up there. If you click on one and it's blurry or kind of dull, it's probably from before my internship, but if the colors are more vivid and the background is pure white or black, I most likely made it.

<https://vimeo.com/284162385>

<https://vimeo.com/299515526>

<https://www.joelsartore.com/video/red-octopus-octopus-rubescens/>

<https://www.joelsartore.com/video/bengal-slow-loris-nycticebus-bengalensis-2/>

<https://www.joelsartore.com/video/eastern-grass-owl-tyto-longimembris-chinensis/>

You may also find a use for this link. It's Joel's TV show on PBS that aired this past spring. It's extremely well done and gives a great overview of what the Photo Ark is all about.

<https://www.pbs.org/show/rare/>

Here are links to some of my favorite photos of Joel's:

A horsfield's tarsier in a defense display

<https://www.joelsartore.com/ani064-00113/>

A female Mexican grey wolf (federally endangered) in the snow. This is one of my absolute favorite images.

<https://www.joelsartore.com/wol002-00121/>

Some federally endangered Cumberlandian Combshells. Joel like to stress the importance of species like these, ones that people don't tend to care as much about, but that have a huge impact on the environment and would be devastating to lose to extinction.

<https://www.joelsartore.com/esa001-00287/>

A baby Aye Aye (type of lemur from Madagascar) named Tonks (after the Harry Potter character).

<https://www.joelsartore.com/ani042-00111/>

A smiling terrapin

<https://www.joelsartore.com/ani024-00355/>

A baby Bornean orangutan named Aurora with her adoptive mother, Cheyenne

<https://www.joelsartore.com/ani090-00001/>